

Beginning Farmers Training Program

Full Scholarship | Funded by Neighborhood Farms USA

Thank you for your interest in the Beginning Farmers Training Program, a community impact initiative sponsored by Neighborhood Farms USA (NFUSA).. This program is designed to equip aspiring growers with practical skills, real-world farm experience, and clear pathways to future opportunities in regenerative agriculture. The program is hosted at Tiny Farm, a successful farm operation where participants learn by doing, planting, harvesting, managing soil health, caring for crops, and supporting food distribution within the local community.

What Makes This Program Unique

- Full Scholarship: Program cost is fully paid for by Neighborhood Farms USA at no cost to participants.
- Hands-On Training: You will work directly on an active farm, learning the full growing cycle from seed to harvest to distribution.
- Career Pathway: Participants who excel will be considered for paid opportunities with Tiny Farm, NFUSA, and other local farms.

What You Will Learn

Participants receive step-by-step training in:

- Soil health, composting, and fertility management
- Crop planning and succession scheduling
- Organic pest and disease control
- Irrigation setup and troubleshooting
- Nursery management (seed starting, propagation)
- Field management (bed turnover, planting techniques)

- Harvesting, washing, packing, and distribution

Training includes both in-person farm work and online educational resources.

Opportunities After Completion

Successful participants may be:

- Eligible to manage NFUSA's projects including community gardens and a mini farm located at FIU growing nutrient-dense produce for the community.
- Considered for paid work at Tiny Farm or other farms in the local network.
- Connected with ongoing volunteer, consulting, and community agriculture initiatives.

Additionally, the program will be documented through photos and short media pieces to highlight the journey of new farmers and inspire community engagement around food access and health.
